A bullet next to an item indicates its consideration as a “Beverage of Distinction.”
Nero come Il Diavolo,
Caldo come L’Inferno,
Puro come un Angelo,
Dolce come L’Amore.

“Black as the devil
Hot as Hell,
Pure as an angel,
Sweet as love.”

The Lord Talleyrand characterised the nectar of his delight, the pure, rich essence of coffee. He wrote this poem on a napkin during one of many visits to a London coffeehouse.

People have admired, idolized, revered and imbibed coffee for a thousand years. This great thought-provoker, this passion-inflamer, this warmer of hearts has brought centuries and ages, across cultures and nationalities, from Arabia and Europe, to you with Café Intermezzo.

The History of Coffee

850 Discovery of coffee beans. Legend states that an Ethiopian goat herder, named Kaldi, notices that goats are friskier after eating red berries from a local shrub.

1100 The first recorded incidents of coffee beans being broken from the cherries, then being roasted and boiled by Arabs to make “qahwa”- a hot beverage like a classical soup.

1475 The world’s first coffee shop opens in Constantinople (Istanbul).

1600 Coffee enters Europe through Venice, Italy. One historical account states that in 1652 the first coffeehouse in Europe opened in England. Coffeehouses became known as “penny universities.”

1683 Kolschitzky’s Coffeehouse is opened by a Polish Serb, who had been in the employ of the Ottoman Army as they occupied Vienna. The Turks hired Kolschitzky and taught him how to prepare the coffee beverage from the beans they had brought with them. After the army moved on, he opened his own coffeehouse, to serve citizens of Vienna.

1685 The first official record of the granting of a coffee-serving privilege in Vienna was that of a license to an Armenian merchant named Deodato.

1688 Edward Lloyd opened his coffeehouse in London. It grew very popular over time. Because of the prevalence of insurors who frequented the coffeehouse, a group eventually created an insurance consortium from their meetings there, and called the company “Lloyd’s of London”, after the coffeehouse which served as their base.

1713 King Louis XIV of France receives a coffee tree. Sugar was first used as an additive to coffee in the King’s court.

1723 Coffee plants are introduced in the Americas for cultivation.

1727 The Brazilian coffee industry gets its start with seedlings smuggled out of Paris.

1905 The first commercial espresso machine is manufactured in Italy.

1908 Melitta Bentz uses blotting paper to make the world’s first drip filter, in Germany.

1938 The Nestlé Company invents instant coffee as it assists the Brazilian government in solving its coffee surplus problem.

1948 Achille Gaggia invents the espresso piston to create the first true caffé espresso, or fast coffee, machine.

1979 Café Intermezzo opens in Atlanta, Georgia: the first European Coffeehouse in America.

2000 Coffee is the world’s most popular beverage. More than 400 billion cups are consumed each year. It is a world commodity that is second only to oil in total traded value.
The Café Intermezzo espresso machine, called the Intermezzo Fantastique Deluxe, was designed and commissioned in 1978 by Brian Olson, and built by Jesse Orozco in Los Ángeles. Jesse builds all Café Intermezzo espresso/cappuccino machines to this day. The machine utilizes two autonomous boiler systems with four pistons, or levas. Achille Gaggia, Italian mechanical engineer, invented the espresso piston and brought it to market in 1948. (One of his early machines is portrayed on Page 8.) This was his response to a valve on all coffee machines up to that time, which when opened allowed hot water to flow through the coffee grounds, utilizing only steam pressure and heat. Gaggia realized that the piston, using a powerful spring, introduced hydrocompression to increase the water pressure and actually extract the coffee, and do so more quickly. Additionally, the walls of the piston absorbed some of the heat from the boiling water, yielding a much smoother coffee beverage with no tannic acid, and topped with a rich crema as a result. He named the result caffé espresso, or fast coffee! This then yielded the noun espresso.

As a true European coffeehouse, we prepare all our beverages and entrées when you order, not in advance. We therefore appreciate your consideration.

I hope for anyone, from anywhere in the world, to feel welcome and comfortable in Café Intermezzo. This is our raison d’être.

– Brian Olson

History of Cappuccino

The origin of cappuccino lies in the origins of the Capuchin monks in the 1500s, when several members of the Franciscan order felt that the Franciscans had departed from their original mission. They formed an offshoot which focused on living a very austere monastic life, which they felt was more true to the original intent of becoming a monk. Initially, the Capuchin monks were persecuted, but ultimately they were allowed to form their own order and charter.

These monks are named for their distinctive pointed hoods; cappuccino means “pointed cowl” in Italian. The Capuchin monks believe in living as simply as possible. Neither monks nor monastery are allowed to own property, and the monks are expected to beg and rely on charity for all of their needs, never keeping more than a few days worth of food at any given time. The Capuchin monks focus heavily on missionary and preaching service, spreading the word of God as they travel.

“He had no greater joy than that, which was to sit some hours at the coffee-house, listening to the various conversations, analyzing different minds and characters.”

G. Gozzi, Memorie Intuitti, ca.1770.

Count Gasparo Gozzi could well be described as a Café literato in residence, for he would spend much of his time in the coffeehouse, collecting and recording the minutæ of daily life. “I should recommend coffee-houses as excellent recipes for fleeing from worries, and raising the spirits when one feels gloomy.”

“Coffee is the common man’s gold, and like gold, it brings to every man the feeling of luxury and nobility.”

– Abd al-Kadir

“The actual delights of this wonderful coffee-house can only be shared by those who want nothing other than to be there. A lack of purpose sanctifies the sojourn.”

– Alfred Polgar

Written in Café Central, Vienna

“Coffee renders many foolish people temporarily capable of wise actions.”

– Montesquieu

Teas

Caffeine: Tea contains caffeine, unless it is decaffeinated or an herbal tisane. Tea and coffee have about the same caffeine per pound dry, on average; however, a pound of tea makes about three times as many cups as a pound of coffee. The result is that a typical cup of tea contains about 34mg of caffeine, while a typical cup of coffee contains about 100mg of caffeine.

Health: Major medical universities in America have, during the past ten years, determined that black and green teas are rich in polyphenols. These are antioxidants, which are natural cancer inhibitors. According to the studies, people who consume 4 or 5 cups of tea per day exhibit as much as a 50% lower probability of contracting specific types of cancer, such as cancer of the breast and colon. Also of late results indicate that the occurrence of heart disease is low among people who consume 3 or more cups of tea per day.

Green and Black teas: Black tea is fermented, green is not. Strength and body are enhanced in tea through fermentation, and, thus, black tea tends to have a strong flavor. Green tea is dried immediately after processing, and tends to have a somewhat weaker and vegetative character for these reasons. Green and Black tea come from the same plant: Camellia Sinensis. They have about the same levels of caffeine. Preparation, however, tends to result in more caffeine being in the cup of Black tea. Caffeine is increasingly soluble at higher temperatures, and black tea is generally prepared with water that is between 200° and 212°F, whereas Green tea is usually prepared with water between 170° and 180°F. If prepared at the same water temperature, Green and Black teas will yield about the same caffeine in the cup.

Milk and Tea: Adding milk to tea reduces the pH balance of the tea, and tends to make the taste smoother. Adding milk to tea, like adding sugar, is simply a matter of personal taste.

A pot of hot tea freshly brewed to your order from whole leaf tea $3.75

Cocktails

“Cocktail is a stimulating liquor, composed of spirits of any kind, sugar, water, and bitters – it is vulgarly called bittered sling and is supposed to be an excellent electioneering potion.”

-THE BALANCE, May 13, 1806 (An American periodical)

The cocktail, created in America and achieving dramatic popularity in the nineteenth century, bears a name whose specific origin remains unknown until today. However, a number of legends about the creation of the word cocktail live today, and may hold an answer.

• A slang Bordelaise French word, coquetel, meant flirting with a hangover, and thus became used to describe a drink where a number of liquors were mixed.

• James Fenimore Cooper related a more likely story when he wrote about a saloon keeper who in the 1700s used the tail of a rooster as a stirrer. Thereafter, occasionally mixed drinks were called roosters. An adjunctive story relates how an Elmsford, New York saloonkeeper named Betsy Flanagan decorated her saloon with brightly colored cocks’ feathers, and she subsequently developed the use of decorative cocks’ tail feathers as stirrers for specially drinks. The name cocktail ultimately evolved for those drinks.

The most historically authenticated story:

• About the beginning of the nineteenth century friction existed between the American Army and King Axolotl VIII of Mexico. Ultimately upon calling a truce, an American General and the King agreed to meet at the King’s palace.

Before negotiations began, the King asked the General if he would like a drink, to which the General answered affirmatively. The King so commanded, and shortly thereafter appeared before the men a very beautiful lady bearing a gold, ruby-encrusted cup with a concoction which she made. Since she brought only one cup, neither man chose to drink first and usurp protocol. The lady’s awareness of the problem arose from the tenseness of the moment, whereupon with reverence she bowed and drank the drink herself.

The men reached a satisfactory agreement. Before leaving, the General asked if he might learn the name of this wise and diplomatic lady. The King proudly proclaimed (of this lady unknown to him,) “That is my daughter Coctel” (pronounced “Coke-tell.”) The General announced that her name would be forever honored by the Army of the United States.

Thus, from Coctel came the word, Cocktail.

Absinthe

Absinthe first emerged as a distilled spirit sold for consumption in the early 1800’s, and quickly became the beverage of choice during the Belle Époque period. Absinthe grew to an immensely popular cult status among artists, writers, and musicians, with many considering it a powerful stimulus to creativity. Subsequently, it was demonized in many countries in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Now, in the twenty-first century, it has begun to reemerge as a fine, quality alcoholic beverage.

Gins

Gin was first created in the Netherlands in 1650 by a medical professor named Franciscus de la Boe, also known as Dr. Sylvius. The doctor searched for an agent to be used in treating kidney disorders. He mixed oil of juniper berries with grain alcohol, which both have diuretic properties. He named the concoction genever, from the French word for juniper. English soldiers fighting on the Continent during that time brought the beverage back to England, where it became ultimately more refined, after the continuous still was invented in 1831. As a purer, drier product brewed in or near London, it there developed the shortened name Gin, and subsequently, the full name, London Dry Gin.

Tequilas

Tequila originated with the Spaniards who settled Mexico and brought the process of distillation with them. They did not like the milky sap of the agave plant, which the Aztecs drank, so the Spaniards began distilling the sap and called it Mezcal (Agave leaves are a succulent rather than, as in the case of cacti, a stem, so Mezcal is not made from a cactus.) Several distillers around the town of Tequila in the State of Jalisco began distilling a superior form of Mezcal. They used the whole heart of Blue Agave, indigenous to the region. Thus, if made in this region, it can truly be called Tequila.

Tequila is free of congeners, so aging is not very important. Tequila for export is drawn into vats and bottled at 80 proof. Some producers, however, do age their tequila in wine barrels brought from the U.S. This aging does produce a mellowness and a golden color. According to law, tequila designated añejo must be aged at least one year in wood. If aged from two to four years, it can be called muy añejo. Another designation, reposado, means rested, aged in barrels to obtain its color.

Some mezcal is produced with an agave root worm in the bottle, to mark authenticity. However, the worm is never found in tequila (Confusion occasionally exists between the words mezcal and mezcals. Mezcal is the distilled spirit made from the agave plant; mescal is a Mexican cactus, the source of the hallucinogen mescaline.)

Don Julio Silver... a favorite in Mexico $13.90
Herradura Gold Añejo $13.50
Herradura Silver $12.75

Rums

Sugar making began in India more than 5,000 years ago, and the cultivation of sugar subsequently spread to other cultures. The Arabs brought the secret of distilling, and sugarcane cultivation, to Spain in the 8th century; Columbus brought it to the Caribbean islands on his second voyage to the New World. The British Navy then spread it around the world. It was decreed in the 18th century that each seaman would receive a daily ration of rum to keep their spirits high. Lemon and lime juices were often added to ward-off scurvy.

A rum distillery operated on Staten Island in 1664, and was the first distillery in what is now the United States. Another rum distillery operated in Boston as early as 1667.

Rum was America’s first favorite spirit. In 1775 more than 12 million gallons were consumed annually in the 13 colonies.

Rum must be distilled from fermented sugar cane juice, or a by-product, at less than 190 proof. After extracting the cane juice, it is boiled, then pumped into a centrifuge, separating the sugar from other solids. The remaining molasses is then fermented and distilled into rum. Two main types are light-bodied (dry with subtle flavor) and full-bodied (more aromatic, as with most Jamaican rums.) Light rum must spend at least one year in oak barrels. Full-bodied rums are distilled, fermented 5 to 20 days, redistilled, and then aged five to seven years in barrels.

Bacardi... Puerto Rico $7.00
Captain Morgan... sweet, spiced, 80° $7.00
Gosling’s Family Reserve Old Rum... aged sipping rum $19.00
Malibu Caribbean Coconut $7.00

The word whisky represents the Scottish and Canadian spelling, and whiskey the Irish and American spelling of these grain-based alcohols. The differences between these four types of whisk(e)ys include the type of grain and its processing, distillation, aging, and blending methods.

Whiskeys & Bourbons

Bourbon is America’s native spirit. By federal law, it must be made using between 51% and 79% corn in its mash. If more than 79% corn is used, the product must be designated as “corn whiskey.” Bourbon is a straight whiskey and, by law, must be distilled at 160 proof or less, and must be aged at least two years in new charred oak barrels. Most bourbon, though, is aged at least four years or more. As a “straight”, no blending is permitted, and no additives, except water to reduce the proof. Tennessee whiskey includes an extra production step: filtering through maple charcoal in large wooden vats in order to remove impurities.

Canadian Whisky (1.5 oz.)

As in the U.S., early whisky distilling in Canada was an offshoot of farming and grain milling. Excess grain inventories could be distilled into liquids which were easier to store and salable at handsome profits. Also, many early settlers were Irish and Scotch descendents with long histories of cereal grain distilling. Canadian whiskys are blends, derived exclusively from cereal grains, including corn, rye, wheat and barley malt. Each accounts for less than 50% of the formula. Many Canadian brands include at least 20 different whiskys of different ages. Canadians are generally distilled at higher proof levels than American whiskies.

Single Malt Scotch Whiskies

Made exclusively from malted barley, using grain dried over peat in a kiln. This peat imparts the smoky flavor typical of single-malt scotches. The whisky is made exclusively from malted barley, using grain dried over peat in a kiln. This peat imparts the smoky flavor typical of single-malt scotches. The malt is brewed with water which in Scotland is very mineral-rich. This creates a “wash,” which is then double-distilled using old-fashioned “pot stills.” The “middle-runnings” are the most desirable for use, while the first and last runnings will be re-distilled later.

The “baby whisky” at this point has no color and is about 70% alcohol, then diluted with water to about 63% alcohol. This spirit spends years in oak casks for aging. American Bourbon casks are generally used, but sometimes sherry casks are chosen, with the type of cask and the length of aging being strong factors in determining the style and quality of whisky which results. The whisky must be aged 8 to 12 years. Some are aged up to 25 years, but aging over 15 years is difficult and must be carefully monitored, because the whisky can dry through the barrel, and can also absorb more flavors from the cask wood.

The whisky is drawn from the barrels, diluted with water to about 80-86 proof and generally blended among different vintages in order to produce flavor consistency in a brand. (A whisky can be termed “single-malt” as long as only whiskys from the same distillery are blended.)

The geographical regions of malt whisky production in Scotland include: Highlands, Lowlands, Campbeltown, Islay (the island), Skye, Jura, Mull, Orkney.

Cognacs (1.5 oz.)

Cognac...distilled from wine, it is thus, technically, a brandy; however, for brandy to be Cognac it must come from the Cognac region of France (southwestern area close to the Atlantic Ocean and the Spanish border) and be subject to many production guidelines and standards of quality. These include: wine produced from specific grape varieties, double distillation in the Charente alambic pot still, oak barrel ageing, and minimum age requirements.

VS means Very Special; aged for a minimum of 30 months. This is the name given by Cognac suppliers to their youngest Cognac quality when marketed in the United States; the same quality in other international markets generally bears the name Three Star.

VSOP means Very Superior Old Pale; aged for at least 4½ years. This is the name used by Cognac makers for their next-oldest quality. Other names used at times are VSP or VO.

XO, Napoleon, VXSOP, and Royal mean aged for a minimum of six years. Fine Champagne on a label indicates that the Cognac originated exclusively from the two premier crus of the Cognac region: Grande Champagne and Petite Champagne. Additionally, this Cognac must contain a minimum of 50% Grand Champagne and is, by its origins, a superior Cognac.

Hennessy VSOP $16.75
Hennessy XO $65.00
Rémy Martin VSOP $13.00

Armagnac (1.5 oz.)

Armagnac...often called the connoisseur’s brandy. This is possibly France’s oldest distillate of wine. Commercial production records back to 1422, but Armagnac was used for medicinal purposes as far back as the early 12th century.

Larressingle VSOP Gascony, France $15.75
Sherry

The term sherry was coined by the British, the people that brought the Spanish fortified wine to the rest of the world. The town that brought (and still brings) its authentic sherry is called Jerez de la Frontera, located in Andalucia between Sevilla and the Atlantic coast. If you go back a few hundred years the town was called Xeres. In those days the letter “x” was pronounced more like the “sh” in English. This is no longer true; in modern Spanish the “sh” sound doesn’t really exist. When the British “discovered” sherry they just slightly modified the pronunciation to come up with sherry.

Harvey’s Bristol Cream England $10.50

Sake

Sake... has been brewed in its native Japan for over 2,000 years. It is a beverage whose alcohol content of 16 to 18 percent is the result of rice fermentation. It is similar in strength to ports and sherries. It is often called “rice wine,” but the brewing process is similar to beer, in that it is also fermented from grain. However, some of the steps are different, and one result is that sake is not carbonated. Sake can be made from 46 different types of rice. 1) the rice is milled, or polished, removing the outer husk, as well as proteins and oils. The more the rice is milled, the better will be the sake. 2) the polished rice is washed, soaked in water, and steamed. When it has cooled, a mold called koji is sprinkled over it. This mix is then stored in a warm, humid room for 36 to 45 hours, so that the ‘koji’ can grow, producing enzymes such as amylase, which convert the rice starch into sugar. 3) A slurry of active yeast is then added to the rice, converting the sugars into alcohol. When finished, the fermented mash is pressed, separating out the solids, and allowing the liquid sake to run free for collection. 4) The sake is then filtered through charcoal and pasteurized, after which it is aged for about 6 months before bottling. If a small quantity is put aside for aging in wood casks, it is then called koshu.

Oportos (3 oz.)

Port Wine comes from the Douro region in Northern Portugal. Producers began adding in the 1800’s neutral grape brandy to the wine during fermentation to preserve the wines during their shipment to England. This addition helped to create Port’s sweetness.

There are two types of Ports: 1) Wood, which include ruby-dark, fruity, tawny-lighter and more delicate; 2) Vintage, which is aged two years in wooden casks and which will mature in the bottle with time.

Champagnes & Sparkling Wines

Sparkling wines originated in the Champagne region of France. Their unique quality resulted from the unintentional second fermentation occurring in the bottle. Dom Perignon (1638-1715) was a cellar master and Benedictine monk who profited nicely from selling champagne. He was a wine connoisseur who was the first to press white wine from red grapes, to manipulate fermentation by adding sugars to the bottle, and to use natural cork stoppers to retain the carbon dioxide.

Champagne can only bear this name if it is produced using certain grapes cultivated in the specifically-defined Champagne area of France and by the strict methode champenoise. The grapes used to produce champagne can include only Pinot Noir, Pinot Meunier, and Chardonnay.
