World War II Replica Wood Knife

During World War II there became a shortage of metals in Italy, and many other countries involved in the war efforts. In Italy, grade school children would collect aluminum pots and pans to be used for aircraft construction and even silverware (whether plated or not) would be collected to make other vital war machinery.

Soon there became a shortage of cutlery and silverware and Italians started to make cutlery out of wood. At first the wooden cutlery was very basic but soon, as by the nature of Italians, the shapes became elaborate and beautiful works of art.

This knife is a replica of one found in the Italian National Historic Museum in Milan, Italy and was handcrafted here on Catalina Island by Charlie Canby. During the war such knives were in common use but today one of this type works nicely as a cheese knife.

Zane Grey Signature Wooden Spatula

The signature Zane Grey spatula design was brought back from the South Seas by Zane Grey's personal cook in his camp kitchen. The design has remained unchanged for ninety years.

This wooden spatula will be your first choice for stovetop cooking with its' flat end for stir-frying and its' unique subtle scoop for dipping out a taste. Rumor has it that Zane Grey's cook used wooden spatulas because they would not mar the non-stick coconut oil glaze on his frying pans.

This spatula was replicated in the Canby Shop, in view of Zane Grey's home on Catalina Island. The wood is from the planking of a garden designed ketch that broke up on Pebbly Beach Road during the winter of 2016.

CHICAGO

An all original set of J.C. Deagan dinner chimes made at the same Chicago factory that manufactured the Catalina Chimes.

J.C. Deagan Company of Chicago was the largest manufacturer of dinner chimes in the United States in the early 20th Century. Deagan made a number of different models in several different keys, with slightly differing chime plates and resonators, and in three, four and five tone versions. The chimes themselves came in different "keys"; however, the relationships between the individual notes were always the same. They were based on the lip partials of brass instruments and Deagan published small songbooks filled with military bugle calls that could be played on any Deagan chime.

These small chimes were used to announce dinner in trains and in homes.

Felted Wool Purse

This felted wool purse was knitted by weaver and knitter Claudia Canby of Avalon. When the bag was originally knitted it was about twice the size as you see it now and the purse was then "felted". To felt a purse, it is washed in near boiling water causing the wool to shrink and the wool fibers to lock together. The process of felting can only be done with natural fibers such as sheep's wool, buffalo fur and human hair. In the latter case, the felted hairs are known as dreadlocks!

This bag can be used a conventional purse or to carry a baby up to about one-year old or even your small pet dog!

FOUNDATION

Eight guests will enjoy an exclusive tour of The Tuna Club of Santa Catalina Island - This is a once in a lifetime opportunity to privately access the historic birthplace of modern sportfishing. Preserving The Tuna Clubs' history has remained an important tradition to the membership since the clubs' founding in 1898 and this history will proudly be shared with you during your tour which will be custom made to suit your and your guests' tastes.

Following your tour, you will be treated to made-to-order cocktails on the private deck - a proud heritage that only Tuna Club members can usually enjoy!

It can be said that the history of the Tuna Club and the history of big-game fishing are one and the same. This is due to the fact that the life of the legendary organization from Catalina Island has been in existence more than a century. It's angling pioneers have literally presided over the birth of this segment of the sport. Here is where the world's first rod and reel captures of tuna, marlin and broadbill swordfish took place.
