“Thinking Outside the Box: Developing Partnerships to Solve Our Workforce Shortage”

Members of the residential construction industry are well aware of the shortage of skilled workers in Texas and the U.S. but may not know how to help solve the problem. This session will provide you with information on how builders, their trades and suppliers can work together to ensure that students in construction trades programs have all the tools they need – classroom education, lab training, and hands-on experience – to immediately join the residential construction industry upon graduation. TAB and the local HBAs have developed partnerships with the Home Builders Institute, community colleges and Habitat for Humanity to name a few, and you can help expand this network of industry partners. Brady and Rohrbacher will discuss the resources that are available, and how you can easily become a part of this group effort to help solve our workforce issues.
