keep them motivated and engaged? How do you turn new employees into brand

ambassadors?

Brand ambassadors are employees who are engaged, connected and committed. They feel a connection to your company brand, and understand their role in turning your brand aspirations into reality. If you aren't inspiring your talent to be brand ambassadors, you are missing out. As a leader, you must educate your team on your brand and live the brand so that they can learn by example.

Take a personal with corporate view rather than the personal vs corporate view. In other words, take a personal interest in your employees. Ask them questions such as, "What was their best day at work and what made it that way?" This will show them that you are interested in them and what makes them tick and you gain insight into what motivates and engages your employee. By using this type of approach to employee relations, you lower your turnover rate and retain happier, more productive and efficient workers.

Invest in your employees, take them to a trade show or workshop. Keep them learning by seeing and doing new things.

Train them on the current trends and techniques. Give incentives of educational classes that teaches them and then let them come back and train other team members on what they have earned. This will keep your business strong and advancing forward even when economic times turn hard. Allow your brand ambassadors to help pave the way for everyone's success!

A strong brand requires employee engagement, which is driven by integrating the personal brands of your people. They are the greatest existing resource within any organization.

OUR FEBRUARY MEETING HOSTED BY INSPIRED FOODS

Our February meeting was hosted by our friends at Inspired Foods. Owner and long time Bakery Industry supporter, Mitch DiMatteo, graciously opened the doors of his company and hosted our meeting. As we finalized the Winter Workshop that will be held at Harrah's Marina Hotel in Atlantic City, New Jersey on March 9, 2015, Mitch and his staff prepared a delicious array of dishes and desserts to please our palates. The New Jersey Bakers Board of Trade Board members would like to Thank Mitch and his staff for their continued support of the Baking Industry and their hospitality!
