CROP BISTRO | OHIO CITY

In Cleveland, the '20s were really roarin'! World War I had ended in victory. The city's economy was thriving. Jobs were so plentiful that workers flocked to the city from all over the U.S., even overseas.

Cleveland became America's second most wealthy and the fifth largest city. Musicians migrated from New Orleans. The Cleveland Indians won the World Series. Sure, there was Prohibition, but who cared? Bootleggers smuggled spirits in from Canada.

There was nothing we couldn't do! We modernized our city government and built an airport. Commerce was prolific leading to the designation of a Federal Reserve Bank downtown. No doubt, Cleveland was on a roll.

It was during these historically thrilling times that nationally renowned architects Frank R. Walker and Harry E. Weeks introduced their signature academic neoclassical architecture called Beaus-Arts inspiring the design of Severance Hall (home of the internationally renowned Cleveland Orchestra), the Cleveland Public Library and the Federal Reserve Bank of Cleveland.

They then boldly created a nine-story building in 1923 called the United Bank Building, once the largest building on the west side of Cleveland is now home to Crop Bistro & Bar.

Your guests will be ushered through the historic bank lobby with its soaring 35-foot coffered ceilings to either a staircase or elevator to be transported to what was originally the bank's counting room, now Crop's prep kitchen. Just off the kitchen is the actual bank vault featuring the original front and back doors weighing a combined 160,000 pounds.

The industrial space features metal walls, sepia photos of Cleveland architectural icons, and a small 1,000 pound vault where the bank's most wealthy customers kept important documents and valuables, including the bank president.

One original patron of the bank once told us a woman with a journal would sit in the atrium just outside the vault. When customers wanted access to their safety deposit boxes housed within the vault, she would retrieve the valuables and guide them to one of six small, private rooms to conduct their business.

All this historic whimsy has been expertly preserved providing a spectacular venue for any occasion.
