

Scott Peterson

Senior Director, Business Development | KBR Defense & Intelligence

Scott Peterson is Senior Director of Business Development for KBR's Defense & Intelligence business, leading growth strategy, customer engagement, and strategic partnerships across the Department of Defense and the national security community. With more than two decades of experience supporting military and government missions, he specializes in aligning advanced technology solutions with critical operational requirements in electronic warfare, space operations, intelligence, logistics, mission systems, and emerging defense capabilities.

Based in Huntsville, Alabama, Scott works with senior military leaders, government agencies, industry partners, and research organizations to identify and develop innovative solutions that enhance warfighter readiness and mission effectiveness. He has helped advance KBR's portfolio across Army, Air Force, Space Force, and Joint capability initiatives, fostering collaborations that accelerate the transition of technology from concept to operational deployment.

Before assuming his current role, Scott held leadership positions spanning business development, program management, and operational support within the defense sector. He is committed to building partnerships that deliver meaningful mission outcomes and strengthen the nation's defense industrial base.

Scott holds a Bachelor of Science in Electrical Engineering and actively supports professional organizations focused on national security, defense innovation, and military readiness.