

Emily Torio

*Communications Strategy and Operations
Northrop Grumman Space Systems*

Emily Torio is on the Communications Strategy and Operations team for Northrop Grumman Space Systems sector, a premier provider of space assets serving national security, civil and commercial customers.

In this role, Emily is responsible for the external engagement strategy and execution of the sector's thought leaders and international programs. She manages the sector event investment and analyzes alignment with strategic priorities and priority customers across the organization, advising the executive leadership team on event strategy across key global markets.

Emily draws on experience across marketing, communications, and business development roles in various focus markets and product lines across the sector. Prior to this role, Torio managed the external engagement strategy for the Strategic Space Systems Division. This included a focus on resiliency technology products and directed energy.

Prior to that, Torio served as a business communicator for the in-space servicing and refueling portfolio. She also previously led customer engagement and external event strategy and execution for the sector headquarters and Tactical Space Systems Division, focusing on communications satellites and manufacturing operations.

Before joining Northrop Grumman, Torio worked as a trade show and conference event organizer for various associations in the military and government technology space.

Torio currently serves on the Air and Space Forces Association – General Bernard A. Schriever Chapter of Greater Los Angeles as the Events Director. She has held numerous leadership roles for employee resource groups serving the Hispanic population.

Torio holds a bachelor's degree from George Mason University.
